

Why believe their darkness?

ALI G

The bottom is nigh
The darkness will not lift
The light has tried to shine
But now it's tired
It's been tortured too long

Is it fair to continue this torment?
Is it fair to continue this pain?
It will be the end
It will be a place of rest
It will end the battle
It will cease the gunfire...

But is this really true?
Why believe that deprivation really does end in complete darkness?
Why believe the batteries will eventually cease to work?
Who are they to say?
They are not a duracell
They have not experienced the gunshots
Why believe...

A belief in the outsider means giving in to the depriver
Means stopping the fight
Means accepting the flavour
Means accepting their law
Means becoming a criminal
Means coming to rest in a small ray of light

It could mean hope

It could mean true survival

It could mean joy

It could mean deprivation becomes celebration

Maybe believing their darkness is the only option?

Maybe there has been too many fights?

Maybe it's time to give in to the feeder?

Maybe it's time to unite?

For now believing in their darkness seems the only way

After all maybe it's not giving in but rather giving life that one last chance...
